It was about 6 o'clock P. M., the 16th of the month, just as every one was on Sheumatism and full information. Add burrying home from business. It bad been snowing all the afternoon, but had now turned to hail. I thought that I would wait until it let up a little, so I stepped in a doorway next to a drug store. I had waited there for, I presume, about forty-nve minutes, and had just made up my mind to make a start, when I saw a young lady running from one door to the other, trying by this method to reach home and keep off as much of the wet as possible.

When right in front of me she slipped and fell, so it was my fitty to offer her my assistance. When she was safe on her feet again I offered her the loan of my umbrella which she at once accepted said hurried away be ore I had time to find out her name or address.

I went home, got wet, caught cold, went to my hed and stayed there for six weeks. When I was well again I harpened to pick up an old local paper and saw the following personal:

E. G. Gilmore and Alexander Comstock own the American rights to a number of one-act plays by Jerome K. Jerome. Young Jerome, like most successful men, is bitterly attacked at times. An English writer scores his "New Lamps for Old" mercilessly. Says this writer: "The farce lacks point, plausibility, ingenuity and humor. These are sins of omission, but they are supplemented by a serious one-of commission a narticularly nanseous suggestion." a particularly nauseous suggestion.

The farce, by others, is said to be very many accessions from French workingments the ranks of the Rotherhood made such a step necessary. The "ritual" of the Brotherhood is to be abolished.
